To whom it may concern,

I have had the pleasure of working with Kevin Murray as his direct manager while he has worked at Revelyst as our Sales Operations & Data Maintenance Intern.

Kevin brought a lot of technical knowledge to this role that I didn't expect an intern to have. He was chosen over other candidates because in the interview, he demonstrated his understanding of data visualization tools like PowerBI and Excel, as well as understanding of database fundamentals and SQL queries.

Even with these strong technical skills, the most valuable thing that Kevin brings to the table is his curiosity and desire to take on new projects and responsibilities. I was impressed at how quickly he learned his way around reporting in our ERP (NetSuite). Just a few days into his internship, he was able to start taking on ad-hoc requests for reports. I was expecting it to take several weeks of training before an intern would be able to do that, but Kevin has such a good understanding of database structure, so he was able to learn our ERP very quickly and start pulling his weight in his first week.

Kevin is eager to learn and increase his capacity to contribute to our company. I have valued his input and insight into projects that we have worked on together. He has done great work here during the course of this internship, and I can sincerely say that he will add value to any organization that he is a part of.

Sincerely,
